This source has sailed Central and South American waters for many years. He was last in Central American waters in July-August 1954. The Navy's interviewing officer describes him as observant and competent, and believes his information to be probably true.

The Office of Naval Intelligence furnished the following information to CIA for IAC dissemination in accordance with paragraph 3(c), NSCID 7. (DIO-11ND Conf reports 381-54 and 431-54)

X. In June 1954, it was reported paragraph 10. of [redacted] that the British flag ship SPRINGJORD had been sunk at anchorage at San Jose. The SPRINGJORD was bombed, but the ship was not sunk. All ~~the~~ the cargo was burned, and a claim for over one million dollars has been entered for this loss. The ship is a total loss and is a derelict that constitutes a hazard to navigation. Port authorities at San Jose requested that we tow the SPRINGJORD out to sea and sink it, ~~which we~~ but we declined. If the SPRINGJORD does sink in its present position it will constitute a more serious hazard to navigation.

Note: On file in CIA Graphics Register are five photographs showing bomb damage of the SPRINGJORD, which were taken late in August 1954.
